Individual participation orientation is also present here as drivers can sign up and participate on their own to pick up and drop off meals, whilst still contributing to the community. They can choose when they want to participate and go online

Drivers can choose to accept or reject orders if they choose to not participate

Lecture: Supporting learning & collaboration with gamification

Topic: CoPs/digital habitats & gamification

For restaurants, I implemented some gamification that is not finished at this point but I hope to complete in the future. Currently it rewards the user with badges for completing a donation. At each stage they get an accomplishment and reach a new level. They can view their completed achievements as well as the ones they can still get. Among individual badges you can see who else has them, which I would implement showing the other restaurants that have the badges, as well as adding a leaderboard for some friendly competition between restaurants. This allows restaurants to feel some togetherness in a community whilst using the app.
